Price and Kelly, the Pugilists.

The recent fistful match continued but twenty-seven, instead of forty minutes. As many of our readers "fancy" such news, we give a short biography of the contestants:

Edmund Enoch Price was born in London, England, in the year 1832, and is consequently twenty-seven years old, though he looks much older. Height five feet nine and a half inches, stands erect, and has a firm, rather determined expression of countenance.

His ordinary weight is about two hundred pounds, though at present (October, 1859), it is about one hundred and fifty-four pounds, and if necessary it can be reduced to one hundred and forty-eight.

Mr. Price came to this country in 1854, and when occasion required, acts as interpreter for the Maine Court at Boston—particularly in the case of French sailors. Having resided five years in France before coming here, he acquired and speaks the French language fluently.
He has always been healthy and robust, and has had a uniformly temperate life. Medicine he knows nothing of, never having had to use it. He has fought several battles, but in none were the stakes of the magnitude of those risked in the encounter with Kelly.

Johnny Moore was his first antagonist, the battle with him took place in Yorkshire, and lasted one hour and forty minutes, at which time victory was decided in his favor. His second antagonist was Bill Agon, who was defeated in twenty-five minutes, July, 1852.

Third, he encountered Tim Turpin, in Sheffield, and whipped him in three rounds. The fourth contest was Harry Roebuck, at Sheffield, whom he defeated in battle of only twelve rounds.

His next engagement was with Luke Forrester, in Leeds, May 1, 1853. Sixteen rounds were fought in twenty-eight minutes, Price winning the stake, £5. He was next engaged in a "turn up" with a Warrington rough, and defeated him in six rounds. Also a shoemaker, at Stone, in Staffordshire, for £1 a side, and at Wolverhampton he won £3 of the "Stourbridge Chickens" in twenty-eight minutes. His last battle was with Joe Coburn, of New York, for a purse of $500 a side. This lasted three hours and twenty-two minutes, one hundred and sixty-eight rounds being fought, when darkness coming on, the fight was declared drawn.

In June last he received a forfeit from George King, who failed to "come up to the scratch." From this forfeit resulted a challenge from Kelly, which was accepted by Price, and he was to fight on Saturday next three days after it was made.

This match was for $2,000—or $1,000 a side stake, and for the championship of the middle weights of America. It is called a catch-weight match—that is, neither are obliged to reduce themselves to or below a certain weight.
Price and Kelly never met until the day of the battle, and consequently knew nothing of each other's peculiarities, mode of attack or value of blows.

Price and Kelly are both of the Irish race, healthy and desirable sort, seven or eight miles from Boston. In his training there has been the same general regard paid to his diet and habits that is usually thought requisite for the full development of muscular power. The only peculiarity was in the introduction of the Indian club exercise. We had an opportunity of seeing Mr. Price use these instruments while completing his training, at Durt Scott's, near Dublin, and saw him strike with his ability, and, judging from the development of the muscles of the shoulders shown in the present case, they must become a favorite instrument for trainers.

James, familiarly known as "Austrian Kelly," was born in Ireland, December 23, 1831. He stands five feet eight and a-half inches, and weighs one hundred and forty-five and a half pounds, in condition, (October 5). He has fought ten battles in England, and was the conqueror of the first in this country—making a total of fourteen. His trainer is John Lawrence, who handled Morrissey; he went into training June 16, at Coney Island, near New York, where he could enjoy sea-bathing and good air. He remained here but a few weeks, and removed to Lansingburg, locating at the "Abbey;" here he completed his severe drill. He left for the battle-ground October 3, and passed through Buffalo to a location five miles from the ground selected, where we met him the day before the mill, looking well and anxious to go in.
